"Fix—"
Five hundred rifle barrels inclined sharply to the front and five hundred bayonets, withdrawn from their scabbards, were poised, rigid, up-pointing, above the muzzles.

"BAYONETS!"
There was a rattle and clatter of metal upon metal as the weapons were pushed home to the catch. The rifles came back to the order and left hands cut away smartly to the sides.

"SLOPE—ARMS!"
One—two—three. With the precision of a gigantic machine the rifles simultaneously lifted from the ground and settled upon the left shoulders, every piece in perfect alignment at exactly the same angle with the March sun glinting from the serrated rows of steel.

"The battalion will move to the left in column of route, 'A' Company leading." Form four—LEFT!
The double ranks dissolved into sections of fours and faced to the left.

"A Company, Quick—MARCH!"
Crash, bang, bang. The band struck up a stirring air and the 49th was off on its last parade as a unit.

A Memorable Day
What a day it was Saturday, March 22, in Edmonton never saw the like before. A day of historic moment, a day of historic moment, a day of historic moment.

Saturday had a personal note. It was a day of historic moment, a day of historic moment, a day of historic moment.

That dawn of November 7, when the first Canadian battalion landed in France, was a day of historic moment, a day of historic moment, a day of historic moment.

Before the parade started, there were a few words and no did Sir General Macleod, who was in command of the 49th, who was in command of the 49th, who was in command of the 49th.

The Lieutenant-Governor, a big sergeant, stood with his arms about a slender soldier, who was in command of the 49th, who was in command of the 49th, who was in command of the 49th.

When the lights went out in the armory it was indeed "the end of a long day."

The Weather Man, alive to his responsibilities, had been in the city for a long time, and he was in the city for a long time, and he was in the city for a long time.

By half past one o'clock the avenue was lined with the crowd of the Great War Veterans' detachment, who were in the city for a long time, and he was in the city for a long time, and he was in the city for a long time.

the National Hockey League.
The Canadians, Montreal's champions of the National Hockey League, turned the tables on the Seattle
Mariners, champions of the Pacific Coast hockey association, and won 4 to 2. Outplaying their opponents by a margin not seen since the visiting Frenchmen scored Seattle fans how hockey is played in the east. A whirlwind but futile defense was put up by Seattle against a whirlwind and successful attack by Montreal.

The game was the second of the series being played here for the hockey championship and the Stanley Cup. Seattle, playing under western rules, won the first game, 7 to 6. The Admiralty and engagements to the Canadian Olympic Committee. Hundreds were unable to gain admission to the games, and the thousands at the ceremonies in Calgary Saturday night were disappointed to learn that the Victoria men's intensely interesting ice hockey aroused great enthusiasm. In fact, the excitement was so great that the members might attend his own game.

The Canadian club will have Captain Macdonald as its captain, and the team at the Macdonald hotel today at 11 o'clock. The team will consist of 11 members at Lions Pharmacy to 11 o'clock and afterwards from the second floor of the hotel.

ONLY ONE EDMONTON ENTRY IN ALBERTA

Edmonton is the only sporting element in Edmonton that apparently only one team has entered. The team is expected to compete against the Calgary horsemen in the Riding Horse Association's annual event, to be held in the southern city, to 29 participants. The team is expected to be led by little Miss Thorpe, better known as Miss Thorpe, who is a member of the "bearing the lion in his den" and has two horses.

The team is expected to be led by Miss Doty, who has two horses, and will be expected to compete against the Calgary team.

CANADIANS SHOW THE WAY

By ROLAND HILL.

Of the many experiences in quiet places in which the Canadians found themselves doing war duty those of the Canadian Forestry Corps can claim almost prime place. In 1917 Britain, France and Italy were all appealing for lumber—and more lumber. The Allied forces in Russia were straining for it in the worst kind of way. Russia offered a supply if cutting could be organized. So into the four corners of Allied Europe were sent Canadian timber cruisers, men who had creased through Northern Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. Some of them could speak no language but their own, but they knew what they were after and they could tell to the thousand how many billion feet could be cut from a forest. At one time, after three Ontario men had cruised Crete and Mudros, a Canadian mill outfit was started on its way to the picturesque Mediterranean. But the Royal Engineers decided to do the job and the Canadians were robbed of one of their quaint experiences. Parties were sent to Russia and were about to start operations when the distant rumbles of the revolution were heard and they were withdrawn.

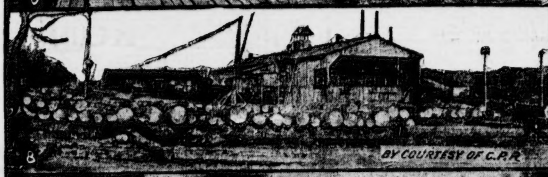

IN THE VOSGES AND JURA. The best record of the Canadian Forestry Corps, outside of that done for the British was the supplying of every class of lumber direct to the French Armies from the Vosges and Jura Mountains, on the Swiss border, and from the Landes and the Grande, south of Bordeaux, in sight of the giant Pyrenees. In the north Canadian uniforms came to be known in the quiet mountain villages and the peasants opened their homes to the strange men from across the Atlantic. Down in the Landes, where reigned a "dolce far niente" almost Spanish, the vigor and expedition of the Canadian woodchoppers were an unending marvel. Some of the Canadians from Acadia found distant relations of the same names, through Cabot and Cartier, in the mountaineers of the Jura.

One day in the early spring of 1917 two Canadian officers, chatting with the engineers of the Paris-Switzerland Express, told of the big engines that drove the Canadian Pacific trains over the big grades of the Canadian Rockies. They were critical of the top French engines. They were invited to take the trip over the divide into Pontarlier, the southern limit on the international border. On they climbed and when the end of the run was reached two big engines, but happy, being, climbed off the engine, honor, any number of the French Railway men's Union. One man had worked the engine up the winding grades and the other had staked. One was a professor of mechanics at McGill University and the other was chief engineer for one of the biggest lumber companies in Ontario. That was the kind of material the Forestry Corps was composed of.

When the timber famine came along the fighting fronts of Europe, the extreme east of the French line and fortresses, like Belfort, were pleading as urgently for timber as the rest. There were huge forests but no machinery or men to cut them fast enough for military needs. Heavy timber meant the saving of Frenchmen's lives, so a bargain was struck that treble the amount cut and delivered by the Canadians in the Vosges and Jura for the French armies would be delivered in standing timber near the front lines. In two weeks bolters and mills from the faraway Dominion were summoned to the use, mountain and leading ridges were blasted out of the solid rock cuttings through the mountains. The peasants who formerly cut the big trees in the valley by ox teams into the valley where there were ancient mills still driven by water wheels. Ten trees a day was a good average for the mill to saw.

Then the Canadians came on the scene. There were many engineering difficulties to overcome. The supply of water for the big Nova Scotia bolters was solved by their own men and the use of dynamite was ordered gravity by aerial pumping. Light railways and the mud roads were macadamized by mountain rock which was crushed in our own outfit. In the various mills at the end of the war the output of all of them had reached 400,000 feet daily, more than the whole Jura produced in a year before hostilities broke out. Fifteen or twenty mills of Canadian type were distributed at strategic points—arrows coming on the scene might have thought themselves to be in Northern Ontario or British Columbia. The clever engineers of the Forestry Corps were always willing to help the villagers. They showed them how to harness the rushing streams that irrigated the vineyard slopes, and turn them into power for electric light or to run their wine presses. One Canadian major who had been in the wooden pipe business on the Pacific Coast, gave up his trade secrets to the fraternity of warblers, and water systems were started in villages that for centuries had dipped buckets into the communal stream.

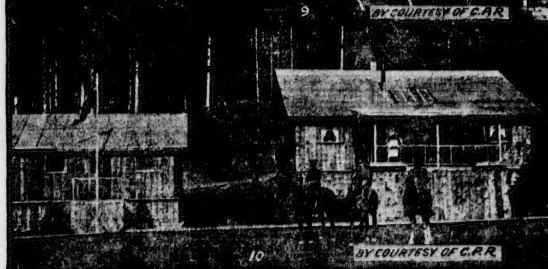

In the south of France the huge pine forests which Napoleon planned for the peasants yield them fortunes in resin and turpentine. It is estimated that the value extracted from each tree per year is five francs. But in forty years the tree goes sterile and there were millions of these trees ready to be cut into railway sleepers and lath planks badly needed for the war. The French Government had difficulty in buying them from the unsophisticated peasants. A government official went with a bank of France cheque to close a deal with one old forester near the Spanish border. It was for quarter of a million francs and a fortune for the old man. He tore the cheque up at worthlessness. He could only think in true values, not in coinage. For several weeks the deal hung fire and he was exchanged for a producing one sixty miles away, asking his production of a hundred extra francs. The rapidity with which the Canadians cut the forest amazed the Frenchmen, who called them the "madness of Canada." They were all good fellows, though, and hundreds of the poor folk who had never had the services of a doctor or been in hospital were treated free by the kindly Canadian surgeons attached to the corps. As in the Vosges and Jura, the Canadians who worked in the mark of the new world when peace called them back to their homes. The hospitals remain and funds have been raised for a French staff to keep them going. New railroads built by the men from overseas link up hamlets that in the past were isolated. It was a quaint experience for the men from overseas. It was a strange temporary situation for the people of the Landes—shows that workers and employers should share together in the control of the industry. It can be so, co-operation and profit sharing in one form or another appear to be the most promising gateways to industrial peace. Those who had the privilege of hearing Dr. Strachan's address before the Commercial club a short time ago would be able to form some idea of the possibilities along this road. Dr. Strachan represents a national business organization, the National Industrial Conference Board. The program outlined by him, was that proposed to be followed

Regina Leader:

The government party caucus at Ottawa has postponed consideration of the tariff over and over again, but it is now announced with a considerable degree of positiveness that it will be taken up next week.

The government's budget proposals will be largely decided by the stand taken by its supporters in caucus.

AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and was Cured.

Baltimore, Md. "Nearly four years ago I suffered from organic trouble, my stomach and head ached, my nerves and every month would have my stay in bed most of the time. Treatments made would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, consenting to a trial. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and I am now able to work as a planter. I feel that I owe my life to what has my trouble of this kind when I was young. I feel that I am a better person than I have done for 30 years."

BRUNNEN, 209 Chestnut St., Baltimore, Md.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before she submits to such a trying ordeal.
